So I waited only long enough to borrow the best looking riding togs from a leading New York shop, and to have it photographed on one of their models. This is the smart habit of the season—for, of course, no one rides side-saddle any more. The smartest girls in all our big cities are turning out in such fetching togs as these.

This shepherd's plaid will be becoming to every type of woman. It is semi-fitting, with a knee-lingth flaring skirt to the coat. The knickers beneath are cut full and protected, where the knee grips the sad-dle, by a piece of black cloth. The high boots conceal the leg, and pro-high boots conceal the leg, and protect it from briars and underbrush when riding through the country.

Side-saddle riding is apt to hurt the horse's back, and certainly throws out of place the spine and hips of the rider. It was started because Anne Boleyn was lame in one foot, and ashamed to show it when riding. And court ladies in those days followed their queen's lead in fashions—a habit they have sensibly outgrown since the days of Henry
